

Penfield Calls For Increased Aid From Provinces, Industry

by MICHAEL P. FEINER

An increase in financial aid from provinces and industry was declared necessary for University survival by Dr. Wilder Penfield in his Founders' Day address yesterday.

"If society wants what we can give, the great industrial units must do much for us, instead of so little. We must seek for the help we have never had from provincial governments". These are the words the head of the Montreal Neurological Institute used in a plea for financial aid to universities.

MORE THAN SPIRIT

Penfield pointed out that although the basic qualities of a university were its men and its spirit it needs more than that to survive. "Professors should not go about the streets with bowls to beg their breakfast like Buddhist priests, or to sell their skills in the market place," he continued.

In his speech, "Down The Stream Of Time", the head of the Institute traced the history of the teaching of medicine in Montreal from the time when a duel was actually fought over the right of a hospital to receive a charter if medical teaching were incorporated into its program.

MED SCHOOL BORN

At this time four graduates of the University of Edinburgh, Robertson, Caldwell, Stephenson and Holmes, were attempting to establish a school to teach medicine exclusively. Failing to receive a charter for a school of this nature they appealed to the newly founded McGill University which immediately made them professors. Thus the first Faculty of Medicine in Canada came into existence.

Dr. Penfield pointed out that the spirit which carried these men through the countless hardships facing McGill in her early days still remains in the men and women who inhabit the campus today.

DEGREES PRESENTED

Before his address Dr. Penfield presented the honorary degrees of Doctor of Science to Jerzy Chorobski, Professor of Neuro-surgery at the University of Warsaw, to whom he attributed the development of neuro-surgical studies in Poland, and to Dorothy Stuart Russell, Director of Barnhard Baron Institute of Pathology, who in Penfield's words "is now acknowledged as the dean of neuropathology."

DIPLOMAT HONORED

At the same time Dr. James presented an honorary Doctorate of Laws to David Moffat Johnson, Canadian Ambassador to Russia, whom he described as a "gallant soldier, able lawyer, skilled diplomat, and dedicated son of Canada."

The same degree went to John James Ower, former dean of the Faculty of Medicine at the University of Alberta, whom Dean Stevenson in presenting the degree called a "doctor, soldier, administrator and citizen".

Neuropathology Discussed By Doctor Russell

Dr. Dorothy Russell will begin a series of lectures tomorrow at 8 pm in the amphitheatre of the Montreal Neurological Institute. Her first speech is entitled "Reflections on Neuropathology".

Dr. Russell is director of Barnhard Baron Institute of Pathology in London Hospital and Professor of Morbid Anatomy in the University of London.

Two Hundred Receive Diplomas In Fall Convocation Ceremonies

by MIKE FEINER

A joint ceremony to honor McGill's founder and to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the Montreal Neurological Institute saw more than two hundred degrees and diplomas granted by the university.

INSTITUTE FELLOWS

The usual audience of proud parents and relatives was augmented by around one hundred fellows or residents of the Institute. These men and women, who received their training in the Institute, represent many cities in all parts of the world where they have since made their mark.

COMIC RELIEF

Although the affair was one of great solemnity, there was some comic relief in the sight of a eight-year-old girl who with a camera slung around her neck bravely took her place among the half dozen or so professional photographers who were covering the Convocation. Unfortunately, she could not find the person whose picture she was to take.

The actual Convocation ceremonies were preceded by a Governor's luncheon in Redpath Hall and by the mounting of a guard of honor at the tomb of James McGill by the Canadian Grenadier Guards.

Societies Strut Their Stuff

by ANN WILSON

Approximately fifty campus clubs and societies will parade their wares tonight at 8 pm, in the Union in a concerted effort to induce students, particularly freshmen, to join their particular organization.

Activities Night, sponsored by the Freshman Reception Committee, is the main opportunity for most students to register for membership in interest groups ranging from the African Students' Association to the United Nations Club. At the same time, it is also the one chance of these organizations to lure students into the fold with an eye-catching display, smooth talking and plenty of glossy leaflets.

Prominent among the exhibits being featured in the Walter M. Stewart Room, Lounge and Ballroom are a jam session staged by the Jazz Club, the usual complex maze of tubing and bottles arranged by the Chemical Institute of Canada, and demonstration games played by the Chess and Duplicate Bridge Clubs. Electronics displays, political propaganda and toothsome nurses urging the healthy to "draw a vein" for the Blood Drive will be in hodgepodge but overwhelming evidence.

ALL CAMPUS CLUBS

Nine national clubs, six religious organizations, five political machines, innumerable science societies and countless miscellany have made extensive plans to introduce students to the more interesting features of their group. Schedules of the year's activities will be handed out at the individual booths.

An informal dance in the Ballroom at 9:30 pm, will conclude the evening's round of events.

Swimming Test Dates Changed

The Department of Athletics has changed its swimming test dates for male freshmen in the Physical Education program to today and tomorrow from 11 am to 2 pm. All freshmen must satisfy swimming requirements before any credit for this program can be given.

Registration for activities will take place Oct. 14 and 15 from 10 am to 2 pm, while classes begin Oct. 19. Please get uniforms and lockers early.

The American Ethic And Fellowships

About thirty per cent of native-born North Americans go to college. Some go to prepare themselves for a profession which they have critically selected for themselves; others to fish out and hook compatible husbands. But the majority go because they want to augment their earning power; they conceive of a degree as a launching-pad toward latent prosperity. These people are prisoners of the American ethic which places a premium on financial success; the American acceptance of wealth as a primary index of social prestige.

This valuational postulate is more a characteristic of new societies than of old ones. In other parts of the world intellectual achievement is considered more significant than capital accumulation. Some nations in Western Europe, for example, still award a distinguished professor more social approval than a businessman who earns ten times more. In these societies the most successful newspaper is not necessarily the one with the most advertisements and the widest circulation; and a "good family" need not have a mansion in Bayview, on Park Avenue, or in Westmount. In these societies, the intellect is considered a more significant index of social value than the bankbook.

Meanwhile, back in America, our monetary ethic prevails. Students are encouraged by financial assistance to enter commercial or industrial careers. Government and industry both deplore the critical shortage of capable university professors; yet they earmark their grants for new laboratories and for students of practical science.

In the context of the foregoing, the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, which annually awards one thousand fellowships "to offset the critical shortage of qualified college teachers", stands out like an inspiring beacon of light. We hope it will light the way this year for a qualified McGill student who would otherwise be unable to pursue his academic career.

The Financial Facts of Life

We print today a letter to the editor commenting on our editorial "Slaves of Madison Avenue" and complaining about the high advertising content of the Daily. When the editorial in question was written we mentioned that despite the fact that we are printing a high proportion of advertisements we will be running on a deficit (which was last year in the neighborhood of five thousand dollars). The letter writer mentions "I think we should get the worth of the little we pay".

His point is well taken. Consider, however, that McGill students pay only $1.50 per student per year. The Daily costs $5.20 per student. The gap is of necessity narrowed down by advertising revenue. If our readers wish to see more space devoted to writing they should be prepared to pay more; it is as simple as that.

In any case, the writer came to the wrong place to voice his complaints. It is the students, through their elected representatives on the Students' Executive Council, who control our financial policy. Any action on increasing the students' share in the costs will have to come through those channels. We suggest that our correspondent consult his SEC member and let his views be known.

Letters to the Editor

Re: Slaves of Madison Avenue

Sir,
I know that this will not be published, anyway I will waste my time all the same.

Until recently, I was a regular reader of the MCGILL DAILY. This I always do during the five minutes preceding start of lectures in the morning, and I usually tuck the Daily into my pocket if there happened to be anything in it worth reading. But recently I think I have been wasting as much time, if not more, reading adverts in the McGill Daily than the time allotted to commercials on the television screen.

I think we should get the worth of the little we pay. The McGill Daily is meant to be the voice of the students and more-over to contain more reading matter, of course not of the lowest grade.

We cannot say that the Daily should always have a deficit every year, but I think a statement made in the editorial should never have been made at all, and I quote "— To do this we must run a considerable amount of ads in each paper. We cannot cut ads in preference of reading matter and we cannot run large papers unless the advertising warrants it". In view of this I think we will change the name from McGill Daily to McGill Daily adverts, and have the whole paper filled by ads.

I overheard a Daily official say McGillians are not interested in writing articles; but I say this that students would like to write articles in the Daily if only one of the dozens of the past has been published. I am sure no student will waste time writing articles which will surely find their way into the W.P.B. This is not new though, since it has been happening even before I was born.

Anyway, if the person responsible for that editorial thinks himself and the board are slaves of Madison Avenue, I think something should be done about their emancipation.

Students Set To March On Station Friday Eve

Ever stop traffic? Your chance has come! A march to Central Station is planned to leave the Union at 6:15 Friday night to meet the train that will be carrying the bulk of the Gael supporters. Throngs will meet at 6 at the Union and will leave 15 minutes later with the band and cheerleaderettes on a traffic-stopping march to the station. A short walk and sing-song around the station will be climaxed by the arrival of the Kingston students. The increased group will then go to the Stadium where Queen's supporters will be made miserable by the superior play of the Redmen (we hope).

OPPORTUNITY FOR INQUIRING MINDS

Each year C-I-L provides fellowships for promising young scientists doing post-graduate research at Canadian universities. Through this program, now in its eighteenth year, over 200 students have had the opportunity to carry out original work under university direction thus adding to their own, and Canada's, store of scientific knowledge. Grants to endow chairs of science and to expand existing university facilities further support the development of inquiring minds. C-I-L's own activities, so dependent on constant development and research, also provide scope and a congenial atmosphere for many trained talents, working together in the ever-new world of chemistry.

SOME OF THE RESEARCH PROJECTS CARRIED ON BY HOLDERS OF C-I-L FELLOWSHIPS:
isotopes produced in nuclear fission • chemistry of wood carbohydrates • wood pulping with liquid ammonia • soil fertility • electrically activated oxygen • gas engineering • nitrogen derivatives of steroids • the use of gaseous ammonia as a plant nutrient • mechanisms of organic reactions using radioactive carbon • spectral analysis of molecules • reactions of active nitrogen • waterfowl habits.
